FINANCING OF LEGISLATIVE ELECTIONS

Contributions received by candidates for the Washington state legislature reached close to $6 million in 1982, but the percentage of increase over 1980 amounts was the lowest biennial increase recorded since the public disclosure law went into effect. Total contributions and expenditures reported during the election years since 1974 are shown below:

|   | 1974 | 1976 | 1978 | 1980 | 1982 |
|---|-------------|-------------|-------------|-------------|-------------|

TOTAL EXPENDITURES BY LEGISLATIVE CANDIDATES 1974-1982

Counting only those candidates of the two major parties whose names were on the general election ballot, the average expenditure by state senate candidates was $32,510 in 1982, up from an average of $24,758 in 1980. The amounts spent by winning candidates ranged from $14,173 by Senator Al Williams in the 32nd District to $78,110 by Mike McManus in the 21st District. The previous regular election year record was $62,191 spent in the campaign of Senator William S. Day in 1980. (In a special election to fill a senate vacancy in 1981, Irv Newhouse spent $113,765 and his opponent, Michael Everett, spent $90,388.)

The average expenditure by a house candidate in 1982 was $18,181, up from $15,317 in 1980. Representative Joanne Brekke's expenditures of $8,503 in the 32nd District were the lowest reported by any winning candidate, and Representative Bruce Addison of the 34th District reported the highest expenditures of any house candidate, $59,272. The previous high was $51,684, spent by W.H. Garson, 22nd District, in 1980.

Tables on pages 26 and 53 show the average expenditures made by different kinds of candidates in the senate and house. Another table on page 22 shows trends over the past four election years.

All candidates for the state senate are listed in a table beginning on page 27 which contains summary information on each campaign. On the pages following this table all general election candidates are again listed, according to district, and their major contributors ($250 or more) are shown.

For house of representatives candidates, the same information begins on page 54.

The campaign finance reports filed by the candidates and their committees list the names and addresses of all contributors who have given $25 or more. In many cases, the reports also show the contributors of smaller amounts although the law does not require that their names be reported. In an attempt to analyze this data and to increase public understanding of how political campaigns are financed, the commission staff has selected a random sample of candidates and classified their receipts, according to the following broad categories:

1. Candidates' personal funds: the money and in-kind donations made by a candidate to the candidate's own campaign fund.
2. Party organizations and caucuses: money and services contributed by any committee or club affiliated with one of the political parties, including the political committees associated with each of the four legislative caucuses.
3. Individuals: contributions reported as coming from natural persons or married couples.
4. Political action committees: contributions from political committees, other than political party committees or single-candidate campaign committees; includes committees with business, labor, professional, or other affiliations.
5. Other organizations: contributions from sources other than individuals, party organizations, or political committees; includes associations, corporations, law firms, unions, businesses, partnerships, and single-candidate campaign committees.

Not included in the analysis are funds carried over from prior campaigns and a variety of miscellaneous receipts such as refunds, anonymous contributions, and interest.

A table on page 21 shows the results of this analysis for the campaigns of 1982, giving the estimated percentages of campaign funds that came to different types of candidates from each of the listed categories of sources.

From a review of the analyses of 1978, 1980, and 1982 contributions, it appears that political action committees, the largest single category in 1980, have been surpassed again by individual contributors. The record follows:

Sources of Campaign Contributions Received by Candidates for the Washington State Legislature, 1978-1982<sup>1</sup>

| Source                           | 1978 | 1980 | 1982 |
|----------------------------------|------|------|------|
| Candidates' own funds            | 7%   | 8%   | 7%   |
| Party organizations and caucuses | 9%   | 13%  | 11%  |
| Individuals                      | 34%  | 26%  | 34%  |
| Political action committees      | 31%  | 37%  | 33%  |
| Other organizations              | 19%  | 16%  | 15%  |

The number of contributions by individuals increased from an estimated 39,100 in 1980 to 41,500 with the average contribution increasing from $30 in 1980 to $47.50 in 1982. Although total PAC contributions increased by $280,000 in 1982, and the largest contribution by a single PAC to a single candidate was $15,750, the average PAC contribution amount went down from $331 in 1980 to $260 in 1982, suggesting an increase in the number of PACs making contributions to legislative candidates. The tables on pages 22-23 present more data about the activities of the largest PACs.

Other than the political action committees and party organizations, The Boeing Company was the largest contributor to legislative campaigns in 1982. Monthly reports filed by its lobbyists show a total of $62,675 in contributions to legislative candidates and party caucuses, in addition to $30,000 spent opposing Initiative 435.

Lobbying reports for Weyerhaeuser Company show $22,255 in legislative contributions, $30,000 opposing Initiative 435, and $7,000 to United for Washington. Lobbyists for Safeco Corporation and its subsidiaries reported legislative contributions of $21,566 and $31,175 against Initiative 435.

The largest single source of campaign money in 1982 was the J.C. Penney Company, which contributed $300,000 to the committee opposing Initiative 412 and reported an additional $306,197 in independent expenditures to oppose the same measure. Local J.C. Penney stores throughout the state gave a total of $17,750 to candidates for the legislature.
